IN FOCUS: Epidemic Intelligence for Health Security

The COVID-19 pandemic has highlighted the role of epidemic intelligence for the detection, prevention and response to cross-border disease threats. The surveillance of emerging and re-emerging infectious diseases allows for timely action to mitigate the impact of outbreaks. Therefore, there is a need to enhance and sustain epidemic intelligence locally, across regions and globally.

In Nigeria, the epidemic intelligence mechanisms put in place prior to and since COVID-19, have helped to strengthen coordination and response to other epidemic-prone diseases. The most recent example being monkeypox which since its re-emergence in Nigeria, in 2017, has occurred sporadically within the country and other parts of Africa. Recently, cases of the disease have been recorded in some European and North American countries. This has led to an increase in the disease and further emphasises the fact that a public health threat anywhere is a threat everywhere.

The Nigeria Centre for Disease Control and Prevention (NCDC) has activated a multi-sectoral multi-partner Emergency Operations Centre for monkeypox at level 2 (medium) to strengthen in-country preparedness and contribute to the global response. Data and technology are critical for the prediction, detection and response to health emergencies. The various outbreak preparedness and response structures that have been strengthened and deployed nationwide to respond to COVID-19, are also being leveraged to enhance surveillance for the monkeypox disease. For example, the use of the Surveillance Outbreak Response Management & Analysis System (SORMAS) digital tool by health facilities and laboratory and community health personnel across Nigeria for real-time reporting of cases of epidemic-prone diseases including COVID-19 and monkeypox.

The effective collection and sharing of information on diseases of public health importance provides the opportunity for countries to connect and learn from one another, contributing to global knowledge and decision-making. Open online event-based surveillance platforms such as ProMed, are valuable resources for public health professionals to track cases of epidemic-prone diseases in other countries.

Early detection of cases is critical to the timely implementation of public health activities, preserving the health of community members and loved ones, and saving lives. We call on government institutions, health facilities and community leaders to remain committed to supporting efforts to curb infectious disease outbreaks in Nigeria.
